Q31. If the 'burden of proof' in criminal cases is set low, more criminals will be successfully convicted, but there will also be more innocent people accidentally convicted. If the 'burden of proof' is set high, more criminals will escape conviction but fewer innocent people will be accidentally convicted. If the death penalty were reintroduced, for crimes in which the defendant could face death if convicted, do you think the burden of proof needs to be higher than usual or the same as usual?
